Farm Loan Act To Have Wide Effects

Believed New Law Will Be Big Help To American Farmers — Educational Value Important Feature — Loan Through Association Only

Whether or not the new farm loan act, which has recently been enacted by Congress and has had the approval of the President, will have any direct effect upon agricultural interests in Hawaii has not been learned; but it is quite certain that it will have far-reaching effect on the mainland.

The act provides a system for loaning money on farm lands at reasonable rates of interest for relatively long periods and prescribes an authorization plan for easy repayments. The legal rates of interest in the law is six per cent. This in urban circles, sounds here like a tolerably high rate, for five per cent and five and one-half per cent money is quite prevalent in a large volume of commercial transaction. But out in rural communities, excessive rates, in many instances usurious rates, are common for money and the farmer, for peculiar reasons, has always had to pay dearly for borrowed money.

Many states in recent years have inaugurated land banks, but the new law provides for a nation wide system under the treasury department. The act is intended to supplement the federal reserve act, inaugurated a couple of years ago and already regarded as a marvellous statute in its relations to finance and industry.

Will Be Operated Apart

But it will be operated apart from the federal reserve system. There are 12 federal reserve banks and as many federal reserve districts comprising the national area and there will be twelve rural credit central banks for the twelve rural credits. But the reserve banks are in the big business cities, like Boston, New York, Richmond and San Francisco, while the rural credit banks will be in smaller cities, more in the heart of the farming communities.

The purpose is to attract money to the farm loan field, and a method has been worked out whereby those who have money to lend can find safe investment in the form of debentures of bonds of small or large denominations, issued by the banks and based on the security of mortgages on farm lands. The borrowing proceeds under the general supervision of a federal farm loan board in the treasury department, composed of the secretary of the treasury, as chairman ex-officio, and four members appointed by the President. The loans are made exclusively through national farm loan associations composed of borrowers.

Associations Shareholders

These associations shall be shareholders also in the farm banks, and in that way the members who are borrowers will share in the profits of the bank. The money for the loans is to come partly from the capital of the banks and partly from the sale by the banks of bonds secured by first mortgages on farm lands. The national farm loan associations will be composed of ten or more persons who own and cultivate farm land qualified as security for a mortgage loan under the new act, provided the aggregate of loans desired by the membership is not less than $20,000. There is an elaborate system of safeguards, the result of many years of study by experts and commissions. Some of these commissions traveled in Europe and culled from experience of farm loan organizations almost the world over. The lawmakers believe they have a law adapted to the peculiar conditions in the United States. Along with the strictly governmental enterprise, there is authorized a system of joint stock land banks that may carry on the business of lending directly to farm borrowers. These banks must have a capital of not less than $250,000 and be under the supervision of the federal farm loan board.

The new law is expected to give a great impetus to agriculture by enabling the farmer to realize on his security and provide himself with working capital, just as merchants and other business men may do. But it is claimed that one of the great features of the new law will be educational in demonstrating to the American farmer the advantages of co-operation.
